BUSINESS, FINANCE ECONOMICS AND MARKETING

The Need for Business, Finance, Economics and Marketing Roles

London has the highest number of businesses per resident of any region in the UK (1,402 per 10,000 residents).

There are over 2.4 million people employed across the UK in the Financial and Professional Services (FPS) industry; with over 1.1 million in financial services (FS) and more than 1.3 million in related professional services.

Around half of the sector's output is generated in London.

The sector produces £278 billion of economic output, which is 12% of the entire UK's economic output.

An Introduction to Business, Finance, Economics and Marketing

When people talk about the 'business sector', they're generally referring to the UK's private sector businesses, but the term 'business' is far-broader than that; encompassing any and all activity that helps an organisation to run effectively and efficiently, stay profitable, and generate money.

A big part of the UK's business sector - and one that is consistently driving the nation's growth - is the Financial and Professional Services (FPS) industry.

There are currently over 5.5 million private sector businesses in the UK employing 27 million+ people and generating in excess of £4 trillion of economic output. With over 200,000 new businesses starting up in the UK each year, these numbers are only going to grow.

One thing all businesses have in common, is that they require the support of six specialist business functions - often referred to as professional services. These functions are finance (accounts), human resources (HR), sales, marketing, public relations (PR), and management consultancy. With such a huge array of exciting, rewarding, and in-demand careers available, this dynamic industry is sure to have a pathway to suit your skills and match your ambition.

Studying at LSBU has given me hands-on experience from the start, helping me build real skills in areas like pitching, public speaking, and managing projects. I've had the opportunity to take on my own projects, which has helped me understand how things work in the real world, not just in theory. Through internships and industry connections, I've gained valuable experience alongside my studies, developing my confidence and improving my organisation and communication skills.

Is Business, Finance, Economics and Marketing the Right Pathway for You?

Gaining the necessary qualifications, and undertaking voluntary placements, can teach you the knowledge and expertise you will need in this sector, but there are a number of personal qualities and transferrable skills that are essential for a successful and rewarding career in the Business, Finance, Economics and Marketing industries: You'll need to have excellent verbal and written communication skills; a high amount of commercial awareness and business acumen, with the ability to think strategically; in-depth knowledge of maths, economics and accounting; analytical thinking skills and be adept at problem-solving; a methodical approach to your work, combined with strong organisational and time-management skills; pay attention to even the smallest of details, often dealing with large amounts of data; possess a flexible approach to work and be open to change; have the ability to work both under your own initiative and as part of a wider team; possess a thorough working-knowledge of computer systems and applications, and be highly-competent in the use of a variety of specialised accounting and business software packages.

Careers in Business, Finance, Economics and Marketing

Whether you're a demon with numbers and statistics, have a talent for project management, want to flex your creative muscles in marketing, or are looking for a career that will make the most of your business acumen, Business and Finance is constantly looking for talented, driven, and qualified recruits to drive the nation's financial growth.

1.4 million businesses have a multi-person workforce; there are nearly 36,000 'medium' sized businesses, employing 3.5 million people, and nearly 8,000 'large' businesses, employing 10.6 million people. London has the highest number of businesses per resident of any region in the UK, with 1,402 businesses per 10,000 residents, and is one of the two biggest financial hubs in the world.

With 90% of the UK's Financial and Professional Services (FPS) employers have experienced skills shortages within the past year, it's clear to see why companies are crying out for well-trained, qualified recruits in positions of all levels. Your required qualifications will depend on how specialised your chosen career path is, and the competition for positions with your preferred employer. For example, many large financial and corporate business employers will offer graduate schemes and will generally require a 2:1 (or above) in a job-related subject for business management, economics, and senior marketing positions. However, vocational qualifications, training contracts, or Apprenticeships - particularly in accountancy roles - can be viewed as equally as desirable by certain employers.

The average salary for a qualified Accountant is between £36k to £40k per year, but this can rise to around £65k with sufficient experience.
